Ondo State Governor Olusegun Mimiko has assured that the state will get a brand new radio station before the end of December this year. The governor disclosed this in Akure, the state capital while inspecting work at the permanent site of the Radio 2 Station of the Ondo State Radio-vision Corporation (OSRC), located at Irese Road, Akure.

The governor noted that he was excited that the whole of the state now receives signals from OSRC broadcasts against the embarrassing situation in the past where the entire Southern Senatorial District of the state was cut off from radio and television signals. Mimiko acknowledged that telecast from the station showed high picture quality. He, however, admitted that a lot still needs to be done to improve on the programme content in order to maximise the investment the administration has made in the agency.

The governor, who described as excellent the extent of work on the new station just within two weeks of commencement of work, maintained that the new attitude of timely delivery on government projects signifies a departure from past experiences where projects were put through bureaucratic bottlenecks that ensured such projects took between three to four years to deliver on. “This symbolises a paradigm shift in government delivery on projects and programmes embarked upon. The quality of work is commendable and we would get the right value for our investment,” he said. The new station will bring the number of radio stations to two in addition to a television station under the administration of the Ondo State RadioVision Corporation.

In another development, the governor, in an unscheduled visit to Basic Health Centre, Molete in Igbara-Oke, expressed satisfaction that everything was working smoothly. He also expressed his happiness that drugs and medical personnel are available to man their duty posts in a very neat and modern facility provided by the present government. tween three to four years to deliver on...This symbolises a paradigm shift in government delivery on projects and programmes
